Chua, a Yale Law School professor, is the author of the controversial book Battle Hymn of the Tiger Mother, in which she described her strict and demanding parenting style. Ruben, a clinical psychologist, is the author of the book Raising Self-Reliant Children, in which he argues that parents should focus on fostering their children's independence and self-reliance.

In Flying Camels And Tiger Mothers, Chua and Ruben combine their unique perspectives to offer a new paradigm for parenting that draws on the best of both Eastern and Western cultures.

The book is divided into three parts. In the first part, Chua and Ruben discuss the different parenting styles that are prevalent in the United States and China. They argue that the traditional American parenting style, which is characterized by warmth, permissiveness, and a focus on self-esteem, is not as effective as the Chinese parenting style, which is characterized by strictness, discipline, and a focus on academic achievement.

In the second part of the book, Chua and Ruben offer a new model for parenting that they call "the flying camel." The flying camel is a mythical creature that is both strong and gentle, and it represents the ideal balance between the "tiger mother" and the "helicopter parent." Flying camel parents are strict when they need to be, but they are also loving and supportive. They set high expectations for their children, but they also provide them with the guidance and resources they need to succeed.

In the third part of the book, Chua and Ruben discuss the challenges that parents face in raising children in today's world. They offer advice on how to deal with peer pressure, social media, and the ever-changing job market. They also discuss the importance of perseverance and resilience, and how parents can help their children develop these essential qualities.

Flying Camels And Tiger Mothers is a must-read for any parent who wants to raise happy, successful, and resilient children. Chua and Ruben offer a fresh perspective on parenting that is based on the latest research and their own personal experiences. They provide practical advice that can be implemented immediately, and they offer a vision of parenting that is both inspiring and achievable.
