The Burundian Civil War was one of the most brutal and destructive conflicts in African history. The war lasted for over a decade, and claimed the lives of hundreds of thousands of people. The conflict was fought between the Tutsi-led government and the Hutu rebel groups. The war was marked by ethnic violence, massacres, and human rights abuses.

Growing Up in the Civil War in Burundi is a memoir that tells the story of a young girl's life during the war. The author, Marie-Claire Buraya, was born in Burundi in 1983. She was just a child when the war began, and she lived through some of the most difficult years of the conflict. In her memoir, Buraya recounts her experiences of living in a war zone. She writes about the fear, the violence, and the loss. She also writes about the resilience and hope that she and her family found during this difficult time.

Growing Up in the Civil War in Burundi is a powerful and moving account of one girl's experience of the war. It is a story of resilience, hope, and the power of the human spirit.
